Charles-Town, May 4th, 1765.

AS the time I have undertaken to inspect INDICO for sale in this town, at one per cent. expired the 25th of March past; it is necessary I should acquaint the public, that it will not hereafter suit me to do the same for less than two dollars per hundred; and that, for sorting, garbling and sealing Indico, from those whose names are not in my register for the three last crops, I shall expect five per cent. on invoice, provided they signify their intention to employ me, before the 10th of July next, accompanied with a ten pounds bill.

If after this offer, any should have reason to complain that their Indico, sent home without my seal and certificate, is a drug there, they must blame themselves for presuming it would be otherwise.

At the same time, I would advise all persons who have Indico damped or purposely wetted, or who jumble the 1st, 2d and 3d sorts together, in order to impose on purchasers, not to offer the same for my inspection; as I am determined always to publish my opinion of such parcels, with the names of the makers, or venders, in the very next gazette, to prevent its being any longer thought at home that, by my silence, I am the father of, or countenance, all the iniquitous practices which have been committed with Carolina indico.

MOSES LINDO, Inspector-General of Indico.

From the GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE, for March, 1765.

An Extraordinary NORTH-BRITON.

Published at Edinburgh.

TO many it has appeared ſurpriſing that the Scotch, never famed for long ſuffering, nor ſlow to anger, ſhould of late have borne tamely and unanſwered the greateſt torrent of impertinent abuſe that ever malice and ſtupidity poured out againſt ſuperior merit; but to thoſe who conſider how flattering it is to become the object of envy, the wonder will ceaſe, and they will agree that the ſilent contempt with which we receive all this ſcurrility, is alſo its propereſt anſwer.—Let then our ſouthern brethren rail at us for the lead we take in war and in commerce, in the arts and the ſciences; their jealouſy is the ſtrongeſt and moſt ſincere acknowledgment of our ſuperiority, and juſtifies in ſome degree, that conſcious pride which leads us to draw compariſons between them and ourſelves, perhaps too much to their diſadvantage. The Engliſh, in general, are unqueſtionably leſs inſtructed than the Scotch, and their principles more debauched, yet there are many among them who, by their learning and virtue, are worthy of our higheſt eſteem and imitation; and even among their nobility there are ſome poſſeſſed of an elevation of ſoul, and delicacy of ſentiment that would do honour to our moſt illuſtrious Scotch families, who trace their origin beyond the name of the Engliſh nation itſelf. Let us then allow them in particular what we deny them in general, and acknowledge the ſuperior merit of an Engliſhman wherever it exiſts, while they, by cavilling at every private character from North of Tweed, only ſerve to fix more indiſputably the reputation of the whole. There is, however, one general ſuperiority, of which they are fully ſenſible, and which no Scotchman is hardy enough to deny. In all humility I confeſs their riches; but if I may be allowed, like the fox in the fable, to find fault with the grapes I cannot reach, I will aſſert that the richeſt part of their nation is the moſt contemptible, and that their ſuperiority in this, is the true cauſe of their inferiority in every thing elſe. Whenever in a nation riches are ſought after as the ſummum bonum, when they ſupply the place of birth and education, virtue and taſte, the morals of that people will ſoon be corrupted, their manners will degenerate, and they will juſtly acquire the diſtinguiſhing appellation of "Les Sauvages d'Europe." How far this is already the caſe in England, I leave every man to judge from his own obſervation. This is, however, certain, that riches, even with us where they are ſo rare, do not beſtow the ſame importance as with them, where they are ſo common. Here an illiterate ſtock-jobber, who can juſt ſet his mark to his quarter's diſcharge, would hardly be as much revered as a maſter of a college, nor a cheeſemonger who can buy a borough, as much reſpected as a peer of the realm. But to leave declaiming againſt their vices, let us endeavour to trace the proper effects of riches in their taſte and manners. We all know with what ſplendor the Italian ſtates ſhone while enriched by trade, when princes were their merchants, and their merchants princes. Venice and Florence then became the admiration of the univerſe for the wiſdom of their policy, the grandeur of their public works, and the elegance of their private luxury. In vain do we look out for the ſame refinements in London, that has now for more than a century been eſteemed the richeſt city in Europe. In private life we find caſteleſs riot and indelicate gluttony miſtaken for luxury, and inſtead of wiſdom and order in their police, we find the moſt abſurd and ineffectual regulations, filth, danger, and inconveniency in every ſtreet, the peace of the city truſted with an old feeble & undiſciplined watch, and the ſafety of the public roads with thief-takers and villains. The public buildings ſpeak for themſelves. They have been long noted for poorneſs of deſign, and clumſineſs of execution, and if any thing of taſte appears among them of late, we may boldly aſcribe it to a foreigner, or to a Scotchman. The works of a Gibbs diſtinguiſh themſelves, and we all know to whom the Londoners owe the elegant deſign of a work now carrying on, which they, however, have diſgraced with an inſcription of their own, that the meaneſt ſchoolmaſter in the meaneſt pariſh in Scotland, would have been aſhamed of. While Black-Friars bridge ſhall laſt, it will be a monument of Scotch architecture, and of Engliſh Latin. And here by the way it is pleaſant to obſerve, that the ſame people who charge poverty on the Scotch as their greateſt crime, and rail at the miniſtry for beſtowing a trifling ſum towards building a bridge that reſts only one abutment in Scotland, have not been aſhamed to receive of the public thouſands and ten thouſands, for repairing the old crazy and ill contrived bridge of London; and that at this moment the pooreſt peaſant in Scotland is actually taxed his proportion for the great and national objects of paving * the ſtreets of that opulent metropolis, in imitation of Edinburgh, and of bringing mackrels and ſprats a halfpenny a pound cheaper to the tables of the wealthy Londoners.

If ſuch be the effects of wealth on the morals, taſte and manners of the Engliſh, we have no reaſon to envy them ſo dangerous a ſuperiority; and yet even this ſuperiority they owe to accident, and not to any extraordinary merit which they may arrogate to themſelves; for whoever conſiders the fatal concurrence of circumſtances that checked the progreſs of induſtry in Scotland, will rather be ſurpriſed, that any ſpark of that ſpirit ſhould have remained among us. While the Engliſh were improving, in peace, the arts of commerce and agriculture, under a ſettled adminiſtration, we were harraſſed by the turbulence of five ſucceſſive minorities; and at laſt our monarchs, leaving their ancient and natural kingdom, and governing it by Engliſh councils, our intereſts were totally neglected, and we became the ſtarved ſtep-children, while they were the pampered favourites.

At the union, the advantages for England were eaſily perceived, our's were more remote. Its firſt and moſt immediate effect, was to load us with taxes we never knew before, to pay the intereſt of debts we never contracted. It was then we firſt knew the bleſſings of an Engliſh exciſe, and the firſt South Britons we ſaw among us were collectors, tide-waiters, gaugers, and informers, ſamples no ways calculated to give us a high idea of the ſtock. We at this time alſo renounced, in favour of our new brethren, the beneficial trade we carried on with Holland and France, from whence, in return for our commodities, we were in uſe to ſupply ourſelves with the manufactures we wanted, much cheaper than we could from them; and we agreed to drink their in preference to Claret, becauſe the Engliſh carried on a lucrative trade with Portugal, in which, even to this day, we have not come in for the ſmalleſt ſhare. To what a height our conſumption of Engliſh commodities has increaſed ſince that time, may be beſt eſtimated from the vaſt importation of Malt alone; and in what light of importance they view this branch of trade, is beſt ſhewn by the keenneſs with which they reſent it, their fleets ſwarming to the moſt remote corners of Scotland in queſt of cuſtom. On the other hand it muſt be confeſſed, that the Engliſh take off many commodities, and that in ſeveral branches we have extended our commerce in conſequence of the union; but it is evident that all our acquiſitions in trade tend to the advantage of England, even conſidered as a ſeparate ſtate, becauſe the more conſiderable our gains are, the more are we enabled to conſume of their manufactures; and in fact we find this conſumption to increaſe daily, even beyond the encreaſe in our ability to pay: So that nearly the whole produce of our mines, fiſheries, manufactures, and foreign commerce is obliged to be remitted to London, to anſwer the ballance againſt us. And to add ſtill to the advantages of our neighbours, our nobility and landed gentry ſpend at leaſt one third of the rents of all Scotland among them. Thus while we ſcorned to become a province to England, we are in fact become its moſt valuable colony, and the Engliſh owe a conſiderable part of their riches to the very people whoſe poverty they affect to deſpiſe.

That they owe their liberty alſo in a great meaſure to a people whoſe principles they have falſely and ignorantly repreſented as inclined to deſpotiſm and ſlavery, will appear by the hiſtory of their own kingdom: And if any Engliſhman will give himſelf the trouble to read what none of his country was ever yet found capable to write, he will there ſee that the Scotch knew to defend their liberties, as well from the uſurpations of their own princes, as from the attacks of foreign powers. How well we did the laſt the Engliſh annals bear witneſs, when for a courſe of almoſt five centuries, we withſtood the efforts of a too powerful neighbour. Even when the ambitious and ungenerous Longſhanks, taking advantage of our civil diſſentions had reduced us to the laſt extremity; all at once the ſpirit of the nation rouſed itſelf, parties united, the tyrant was driven out of the kingdom, and his ſon ſent home in a fiſhing boat, which ought to be preſerved in Weſtminſter-Abbey along with the regal chair which the father ſtole from Scone, as a monument of the end, as well as the beginning of all his ambitious projects. The Engliſh ought alſo to remember, that at a time when their military fame was at the higheſt, under their gallant Edwards and Henrys, it was the Scotch who gave the firſt check to their victorious arms abroad. It was a Buchan & a Douglas that firſt taught the trembling French to face the terrible Engliſh bowmen, and Scotch valour then reſcued the liberty of France, as it had formerly maintained that of Scotland, againſt the unbounded ambition of the Plantagenets.—With what indignation would not theſe Plantagenets, whoſe arms ſhook both France and Scotland, look down upon their degenerate poſterity, who lately, when a militia was eſtabliſhed in England, to revive the national ſpirit of defence that was almoſt extinct, denied to us what they thought neceſſary for themſelves. Thirty thouſand Engliſhmen with arms in their hands, were then not aſhamed to expreſs a groundleſs and puſillanimous apprehenſion of danger from ſix thouſand Scotch, being put on the ſame footing:—Sentiments worthy only of a people who, in 1745, had trembled with black fear at the approach of three thouſand half-armed Scotch ragamuffins, to a city of a million of inhabitants; or who, in 1756, had ſtretched out their weak and defenceleſs hands, imploring the Dutch, the Hanoverians, and the puiſſant Prince of Heſſe, to ſave them from a flat-bottomed French invaſion.

That we knew to defend our rights at home, will alſo appear by the whole tenor of our hiſtory, and in particular the famous letter of the Scotch barons to the Pope in 1320, is an authentic teſtimony of the principles of our anceſtors. They there boldly aſſert their independency on Rome, and their right of chuſing for themſelves; and this too at a time when their neighbours in England were groaning under both civil and eccleſiaſtical tyranny. In later times the reformation furniſhes us with a very remarkable contraſt on the ſpirit of the two nations. What was brought about in Scotland, and forced on the crown by a free and inquiring people, was in England impoſed on the abject people by the arbitrary will of a luſtful and capricious tyrant. If to enjoy Anna Bullen, Henry muſt have turned Turk, the Engliſh nation would undoubtedly have been muſſulman at this day. Soon after this period, when our pedantic James, bred up under the controul of a bold and free nobility at home, ſucceeded to the throne of the Tudors, and came to govern a people accuſtomed to the yoke, he was deceived by their fawning ſpeeches, and began to exerciſe a power nothing new to them, but what he had not abilities to ſupport. It was on that occaſion the honeſt Scot, who beheld with indignation their falſe and ſlaviſh profeſſions, broke out and ſwore by his ſaul, "theſe cringing fools would ſpoil a gude king." In the reign of his ſon, the virtuous but deluded Charles, when he, miſled by Engliſh and arbitrary councils, wanted to extend his prerogative, the Scotch were the firſt to oppoſe him. They did not then waſte their time in idle parliamentary debate, but ruſhed into the field, and our firſt nobility were the foremoſt in the glorious cauſe. Even the gallant Montroſe, that martyr to loyalty, when put in competition, preferred the duty he owed his country to the love he bore his king. It is well known the efforts made by Scotland, at that time not only ſaved itſelf, but even England, from the tyranny of the Scotch family, under which the united kingdoms might ſtill have groaned at this day.

It is needleſs to take notice of any more of their inſignificant charges againſt us, prompted by their malice, and ſupported by ignorance. I hope they do not proceed from the beſt part of the Engliſh nation, whom I love, honour, and eſteem; and as for the deſpicable herd who catch the cry from the Grub-ſtreet hounds of ſedition, ſet on by the rage of a diſappointed faction, or perhaps by the ſecret intrigues of a foreign enemy, they render themſelves compleat objects of our contempt, by an impolitic hatred of brethren, with whom it is their intereſt cordially to unite, and by a mean jealouſy of a people to whom they are every way ſuperior except in courage and capacity. It is plain the alarm was firſt rung upon the approach of a Scotchman to the helm of affairs, and it would ſeem his country is the only crime they can lay to his charge. But let us not adopt the narrow ſpirit of the Engliſh: Let my Lord Bute be judged by his actions, but not by the place of his nativity. We had borne, for fifty years before his promotion, our ſhare of all the diſgrace abroad, and oppreſſion at home, that were brought on the Britiſh nation by roguiſh or blundering Engliſh miniſters, without ever making their country anſwerable for their crimes. Even when the ſpirited Mr. Pitt reſtored the reputation of our arms and councils, no Scotchman ever withheld his ſhare of applauſe, becauſe their miniſter was born South of Tweed; nor afterwards was England charged with his faults, when he engaged us too deeply in continental affairs, contrary to the tenor of all his former profeſſions. Let then my Lord Bute be regarded as a Briton, and as ſuch be intitled to no particular ſhare of our love or hatred.

It is ſtrange that this odious and impolitic diſtinction of country ſhould take place with the ungenerous Engliſh, at the very time when it was almoſt loſt with us; when we were become fond of them, imitating them even to their faults, united with them in the ſame proſperous cauſe, ſhedding our blood and acquiring glory out of all proportion to the taxes we pay; that this ſhould be the very time they ſhould chuſe to quarrel with us, to bely us, groſly to revile us, and to deny us a ſhare in the adminiſtration of affairs. That they quarrel with us and revile us is of no conſequence, but our pretenſions to employments we ſhall never give up, and we truſt to our capacity for ſucceſs; and whenever they begin to think themſelves unequally yoked, let them propoſe a ſeparation.—In the mean time, by imitating their induſtry, let us endeavour, by degrees, to leſſen the only ſuperiority over us they ever could pretend to, while we ſtill preſerve all we ever poſſeſſed over them. While they by narrow minded and impolitic combinations againſt Scotch pedlars and mechanics, are doing a real injury to themſelves, let us profit by their folly, and receive our countrymen back with open arms, and ſtill more, let us encourage their induſtrious workmen to come and ſettle among us.

That truly Engliſh maxim of employing men in publick affairs not according to their abilities, but in proportion to the taxes they pay, or in other words, in proportion to their money, deſerves no ſerious anſwer. They, I own, would have the ſame advantage over us by this rule, that we ſhould have over them by the other. But I wonder the following objections never occurred, that my Lord Bute, even at that rate, might pretend to a great ſhare of the adminiſtration of affairs, while the ſtate would be certainly deprived of the patriotic virtues of Mr. Wilkes, who is as poor as if he were a North Briton indeed, and on whom his friend Churchill's Prophecy of Famine is likely to be fulfilled.

CHARLES-TOWN, June 22, 1765.

IN consequence of some late orders from the court of Spain, every Englishman at Havana has been peremptorily ordered to depart from thence, and obliged to comply with the order.

From Jamaica we learn, that on the 8th instant died there, the Lady of his Excellency William Henry Lyttelton, Esq; governor in chief, &c. of that island.

Besides the 94,798 barrels of rice already shipped from this port, we hear there are about 12,000 exported from Beaufort and George Town in this province; and a considerable quantity has gone coastwise from the most southern plantations to our neighbours of Georgia, which has been exported from thence as the produce of that colony.

We are informed, that there never was a prospect of so large a crop of Indian corn as is likely to be made this present year, in this province: All our other produce too is in a flourishing condition.

The fleet of galleons which passed by this bar the 7th instant, consisted of seven sail of very large ships, with a frigate, and is reckoned the richest that has gone from America for many years past.

Orders are said to have been sent from England, to prevent the exportation of Iron from North-America, to any French or Spanish settlements.

It is also said, that Lord Temple is to be appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland; that the earl of Northumberland is to go with his royal highness the duke of York to Copenhagen, and attend him in a tour thro' Germany, &c. and that Cherbourg and two other ports in France are intended to be made free.

The 10th instant the honourable Benjamin Heron, Esq; secretary of the province of North-Carolina, was married, at Wilmington, to miss Mary Marsden, daughter of the late Rufus Marsden, Esq.

On Tuesday last the brigantine Providence, Capt. Small, from Havana, passed by this bar for London.

A ship from London, Captain Norman master, is arrived at Savannah in Georgia.

A snow from Jamaica for Bristol, is put into Cape-Fear, and is thought will to be condemn'd there as unfit to proceed.
